Planning for the Future

Exciting changes for Michigan Legacy Art Park are on the horizon.

In the near future, visitors to the Art Park will be greeted with a brand new trailhead, trail to the amphitheater and an expanded learning area at Discovery Grove. These are just some of the ideas that are included in a new master plan developed over the last year. The updates will preserve the rustic and artistic character of the Park while making it easier for more people to access the Park's cultural and educational programs.

The first major change is the addition of a second trail connecting the parking area to the amphitheater and Discovery Grove. The new path will be barrier-free and will meet national accessibility standards to accommodate everyone, from guests in wheelchairs to parents pushing strollers. This will give even more people an opportunity to enjoy the Park's educational programs and performances. The current trail will be kept in place for a more rustic hiking experience.

Plans also call for an expansion of the Discovery Grove area, ultimately creating an outdoor classroom where students can explore Michigan's culture, history and the environment in the Art Park's inspiring setting. Like the new trail, the new learning area will meet accessibility standards to ensure that all children have a chance to benefit from an Art Park experience.

While improved accessibility was a priority in this plan, the Art Park staff and Board also recognized that the rustic character of the Park needed to be preserved. To help balance these needs, the Park enlisted the services of Mark Johnson, a landscape architect with the Johnson Hill Land Ethics Studio. In September 2012, Johnson led an intensive two-day workshop with Art Park staff, volunteers, board members and supporters to discuss the issues, opportunities, vision and goals of the Art Park. Johnson captured the details of these conversations in hand-drawn sketches and notes.

The planning process drew on the expertise and resources of individuals and groups throughout Michigan. Gordon Berg, a market research professional, volunteered his time and expertise to facilitate two focus groups and provide us with a detailed written report. Input from community members who use and love the Art Park has proven to be invaluable throughout the master plan process. The development of this master plan was supported by a planning grant from Rotary Charities, and the Grand Traverse Regional Community Foundation helped to match this grant through the Access to Recreation Fund.

Many people contributed to the development of this exciting document. In the coming months, please stay in touch as we launch a campaign to raise the necessary funds to turn these ideas into reality – opening the Park to more people.

Sticks & Stones, A Blue Sky Project

By Kaz McCue

Last summer, I embarked on a collaboration with Blue Sky Project in Dayton, Ohio to bring a group of teens from the city to northern Michigan, immerse them in a new environment, provide them with new experiences and ultimately craft a collaborative, creative project. Our preparations for the project at Michigan Legacy Art Park was inspired by a migration story we had heard. We embraced the form of a ladder as a symbol of the idea of migration.

As we all stood in the Art Park, looking at the finished piece, documenting our work, and discussing the creative process, we had a great sense of satisfaction. In contrast to the urban environment the students were used to, Sleeping Bear Dunes and Michigan Legacy Art Park gave them the opportunity to experience nature and art in a very unique way, and I hope it will be an experience that none of us forget.

Educational Adventures at the Art Park and in the Classroom

Hundreds of students from across northwest lower-Michigan explore the Art Park each year. This spring alone, field trips were planned for students from Lake City, Fife Lake, Mesick, Bear Lake, Interlochen, Lake Ann, Honor, Thompsonville, Benzonia, and Traverse City. The sculpture and poetry stones serve as starting points for further study in history, geography, science, language arts and the environment; the exhilarating hike gets kids moving, and the hands-on art projects give children a personal and meaningful encounter with art and the environment.

Leland Public School: First Snowshoe Field Trip

Leland Public School scheduled the first-ever winter field trip to the Art Park. All seventy-five fifth and sixth graders tromped through the winter wonderland on snowshoes. Renee Hintz and volunteers Phil and Cindy Cook led the children on a tour that got them talking about art and Michigan history.

Frankfort Elberta Elementary School: Special Places

This spring, Patricia Innis worked with art teacher Kristine Harvey's second grade students on a project that connected with the social studies curriculum. In second grade, students approach social studies through the context of their local community. With this in mind, Innis helped students create three-dimensional models of places in Frankfort or the surrounding area they thought of as special. Students first drew pictures of their special place and then used found materials such as cardboard, bottle caps, pine cones, twigs and pebbles to turn their two dimensional drawings into three dimensional reality. Every student's vision was different and ranged from backyard spaces, to beach and picnic areas to vacation spots. This artist residency was funded by a grant from the Jewel Family Art Fund.

Elk Rapids High School: Sea Gull Mound and Flying Birds

Patricia Innis was selected to create an artwork for Walk of Art at Elk Rapids Day Park. Like her work Robins! at Michigan Legacy Art Park, Innis created Sea Gull Mound out of top soil. Sea Gull Mound has a wingspan of twelve feet, a body length of four feet, and is two feet high. Elk Rapids High School art teacher Luke Johnson took the opportunity for his honor students to work with Innis to create the mounds.

Innis continued to work with the students to create their own environmental art – birds made of branches and twigs and other things they found in nature. These birds are suspended over or near the mound creating a truly collaborative work of art. Sea Gull Mound and Innis' work with the students was funded by a grant from Art Rapids.

Traverse City College Preparatory Academy: Community Service

On May 2, twenty students from Traverse City College Preparatory Academy and their teachers helped clear the trails at Michigan Legacy Art Park after the ravishes of winter. They spent nearly three hours working in the morning and after lunch they toured the Park. Norm Ling, Park volunteer who supervised the cleanup effort, said "The students did a wonderful job and a lot was accomplished."

Restoring the Fort

Since Art Park founder David Barr stepped down from his position as artistic director in November 2010, keeping up with the maintenance needs of the sculpture collection has been challenging. That is until last summer, when Dewey Blocksma offered to care for Stockade Labyrinth - the impressive fort situated at the highest point in the Park. The Fort, as it is fondly called, is the destination point for most school field trips and is the highlight of the hike for visitors of all ages. David Barr is proud to have Blocksma, a nationally-recognized artist, care for the Fort and has encouraged Blocksma to "make it his own." On your next hike through the Art Park, check out the Fort to see Blocksma's artistic restoration work for yourself.

Because of the outcome of the Fort restoration, Dewey Blocksma now serves as sculpture conservator for the Art Park, monitoring the condition of each work of art and making repairs as needed. Of this new position, Blocksma notes "One would think that taking a sculpture off its pedestal and moving it outdoors would be relatively simple, but with wind and snow, not to mention falling trees, nature can confound. I look forward to the challenge of extending the lives of the wonderful objects in the Park with attention to developing guidelines for future projects. The fun begins when the obvious approach fails, and you have to find a more creative solution. With input from artists and their audience I am sure we can approach these objectives in the coming year."

Michigan Legacy Art Park Inspires Public Art in Elk Rapids

Walk of Art is a new, outdoor, sculpture gallery scheduled to open in May 2013. Located in Elk Rapids Day Park on the shore of Lake Michigan's Grand Traverse Bay, Walk of Art is being developed by Art Rapids, a non-profit arts organization.

Sherri DeCamp, a member of Art Rapids says, "Atop the list of attributes that make Northern Michigan such a special place for me are the sublime beauty of the natural world around us and the region's lively embrace of the arts. From its very inception, Michigan Legacy Art Park struck me as an imaginative way to blend these attributes for the benefit of artists, art lovers and the naturalist in us all, and at the same time to introduce "art ideas" to young minds in a playful way they understand. Art and nature are like lovers, each wrapped inseparably in the other, dancing their own steps to the same music. The Art Park understands this, and adheres to high standards. I have experienced it in all seasons; I have seen it ignite the imaginations of children of all ages. When Antrim County made the Elk Rapids Day Park available to us, it was Michigan Legacy Art Park that modeled the way for us."

DeCamp says she read David Barr's book, Michigan Legacy Art Park, for guidance when planning Walk of Art. Unlike Michigan Legacy Art Park, whose collection is mainly permanent, Walk of Art will be a gallery where the artwork is for sale. The gallery will open with work by five artists, including Patricia Innis, Art Park education director, and Bob Purvis, Art Park board member.

Letter from the President

With your help, the Michigan Legacy Art Park has become a large outdoor public art museum, a learning laboratory where young and old gain knowledge about the history of our great state through the visual arts.

Your support matters deeply—it nourishes the mission of the Art Park and helps us meet the organization's strategic goals. The generosity of many donors made it possible for nearly seven hundred students from thirteen schools to explore the Art Park on field trips last year and strengthened the capacity and sustainability of the organization.

Many visitors to the Art Park let us know how delighted they are when they come upon a new work of art as they walk, snowshoe or ski the Park. Thus a goal of the Board of Directors is to install a new sculpture in the Park every year. We are grateful to our supporters who make it possible to commission projects like the Great Lakes Project by Brian Ferriby. A year ago we dedicated Ferriby's Michigan in honor of Gov. and Mrs. William Milliken.

With a generous grant from Rotary Charities, the Board and individuals in the local community recently completed a master plan for the Art Park. The plan articulates strategies and design solutions that will make the Art Park and its programs accessible for every visitor and create a larger area dedicated to art education and exploration.

I invite you to be a supporter of the Art Park and help us tell the story of Michigan's history through nature and the arts. Please be a part of the dream and become a member today.

Legacy Gala 2013

Saturday, June 15, 2013 | 6 p.m.

Hosted by the City of Novi at the Novi Civic Center

Join us in honoring David Barr and Beth Dwaihy-Barr, the 2013 recipients of the Legacy Award. Exemplifying the criteria for the award, David Barr has been a sculptor for 50 years and is the founder of Michigan Legacy Art Park. David's studio was in Detroit for fifteen years until he realized he needed nature as a source of inspiration. In 1977, he bought 4 acres of land in rural Oakland County (now Novi) and in 1979 built his home, a contemporary structure that has become the centerpiece of his own art park. David's career as an artist, instructor, author and global thinker has crossed borders around the world, bringing people and ideas together. The love of his life, Beth, has been David's companion and inspiration throughout his career. As a professional dancer, choreographer and instructor, Beth has touched the lives of many through her art.

The culminating act of appreciation for David's artistic contributions and the inspiring home environment David and Beth have created, happened on August 20, 2012. The Novi City Council, looking forward to the cultural and diverse future of Novi, voted unanimously to purchase David and Beth's property and home with the intent of it becoming the city's cultural center in several years. In the meantime, David and Beth will continue to live in and enjoy their home.

The 2013 Legacy Gala is a celebration of the life work of David and Beth and the signature fundraising event for Michigan Legacy Art Park.
